

ABSTRACT

A semiconductor device includes offset spacers that contact opposing side surfaces of a gate of a gate structure. The offset spacers can be formed by selectively depositing an oxide layer over the gate and the semiconductor substrate so that the opposing side surfaces of the gate are substantially free of the oxide layer. Offset spacers can then be formed that contact the opposing side surfaces of the gate.